SANTA FE TRAINS GO OVER CUTOFF

Belen Expects to See Transcontinental Service Through Her Station November 1; Harvey Diningroom Opened.

(Special Correspondence to the Herald)

Belen, N. M., Oct. 26.—It is stated on good authority here today that on November 1 the Santa Fe will commence its new passenger service to the coast over the Belen cut-off, an announcement which has been awaited anxiously by the citizens of Belen for several years. The announcement means the fulfillment of the hopes of many for a greater Belen.

Some time ago Fred Harvey erected a large eating house in Belen, being thoroughly equipped in every regard. The lunch room has been open ever since the house was completed, but the dining room has never been used. However, an order has now been received to have the dining room put in shape immediately. It will be impossible to get everything in readiness for the new service on November 1, but according to present plans the dining room will be thrown open to the public November 12.

The dining room, although by no means the largest on the system, is one of the most tastily decorated and handsomest rooms on the entire Harvey system. Manager McCoy of the local Harvey house is working hard to get everything in shape to take care of the passenger service as soon as possible, but it will be impossible to do so before the 12th of next month.

Mr. and Mrs. H. D. Cox and children have returned to Belen after an absence of two months and a half. They have been in Arizona, where Mr. Cox has been engaged in the stock business. They made the trip overland both ways.

Mr. and Mrs. Adolf Becker and daughter and Miss Elsa Becker returned Thursday evening from a trip to the mountains, where they enjoyed a very pleasant week's outing.

SECRETARY FISHER HANDS JOHNSON A HOT ONE

Says "Pussyfoot" Had More Zeal Than Discretion, or He Would Have Continued in the Service.

(Special Correspondence to the Herald)

Washington, Oct. 26.—Secretary of the Interior Fisher today made public a statement with reference to certain charges which have been made by former Indian Agent William E. Johnson against the first assistant secretary of the interior and Assistant Commissioner F. H. Abbott, of the Indian office, which drew some hot shot into Mr. Johnson. The secretary's statement is as follows:

Department of the Interior, Office of the Secretary.

Some day return to Washington several statements attributed to Mr. William E. Johnson, former Indian agent, have appeared in the daily press which contain serious accusations against First Assistant Sec-tary of the Interior, Mr. Adams and Mr. Abbott are at present out of the city and I have hastened during their absence to reply to matters of this sort. However, the attacks are wholly unfounded and should not remain longer unanswered.

The facts regarding Johnson's reliefation show that he preferred to resign from the service rather than face certain definite charges against him. Apparently, Mr. Johnson entirely failed to realize that a government office in pursuit of crime must be careful that his own conduct is not open to criticism. Assistant Secretary Adams and the officials of the Indian service are quite as zealous in prosecutions against those who sell liquor to the Indians as is Mr. Johnson. If his discretion had been at all equal to his zeal, he should have been continue in the service. Unfortunately this was not the case.

VIOLIN WILL NOT BE PLAYED BY MACHINE

So Says Kubelik, Master of the Frail Instrument. Because Such Music Would Lack Spirit and Feeling.

New York, Oct. 27.—The last lament of the quivering virtuoso softly died away, the magical bow arm which had rolled up the thunder clouds, unleashed the lightnings, voiced the turmoil of an upheaval of nature, carried us our winter steppes and summer meadows held up spellbound at the birth and death of love and had made us feel the presence of the infinite, fell almost paisioned with physical effort to his side, and the great Kubelik stood like some superman on a pinnacle with a face impulsive as the sphinx, bowing to the plaudits of five thousand people when a little girl sitting by my side asked in a frightened whisper,

"Is he a friend of God?"

I told Kubelik about the incident a few days ago, in his apartments at the St. Regis, and he was much chagrined. He had just been invited to go to the prize fight at Madison Square Garden, and he was more interested at that moment in upstairs and downstairs than anything else.

Kubelik is a great violinist and a fine man, physically and mentally.

"An artist is never complete. When he thinks that he is there is something lacking. No matter how well we do we must always strive to do better—when we stop growing we begin to decay."

He was superintending the tuning of a piano when I was ushered in by a Hindu servant in a red turban. His coat was off, his cheeks were flushed, he looked the picture of health and had not seen him for years, but he remembered me instantly, and greeted me as an old friend. His own cigars were not good enough to offer; he must send downstairs for better ones; protests were unavailing. He shook both hands, clapped me on the shoulders, pushed me into a chair and replied to my wondering question as to how he managed to keep himself in such splendid condition by saying:

"Horseback riding, tennis, walking over the hills of my place at Kolín, Bohemia, last summer—outdoor exercise, nothing like it. Absolutely necessary for the artist, I think. We cannot make the mind work if the body is not feeling well. I cannot play if I am not in good physical condition. I must have health and strength to my work."

"And inspiration?"

"The best way to get that is outdoors, roaming in the woods and the fields. Nature is always an inspiration to me. When I finish a concert tour I sorry to my country home to recuperate my forces and get as close to nature as I can. It is the only way. Modern life is very trying, especially in the cities. Everything is so practical; conducted on such a scientific basis; so uninspiring; it is hard for the artist. The keynote of modern life is money, and the whole orchestra is set to the jingle of dollars and cents."

"Yet we money grabbing people are very hungry for music."

"Of course, when we do not eat we become hungry. The spiritual nature is starved in modern life. Music is the result is not music. The artist may have any kind of a personality, that is not important, provided the true spirit is manifested in the interpretation. Suppose someone invented a machine that would play the violin perfectly, with faultless technique, what would be the result? Would people enjoy hearing such a machine give a concert? No; they would listen only about ten minutes and then they would get up and go out. No machine can render the spirit of music. The machine would produce only nice noise, it would not be music at all, because it would lack the spirit."

Kubelik gallantly gives his wife all the credit for their happiness. He frankly states that she prevents him from indulging in any of the melancholy moods that are so habitual with most of our geniuses. Even when he wishes she will not allow him to be miserable. While the countess, with aristocratic hauteur is smilingly silent in their interesting phase of their domestic life.
